Acer's new Netbook quietly pops up in online stores

Posted by Dan Ackerman

If you dug the pictures of the upcoming 9-inch Acer Aspire One Netbook that have been flying around online, you'll be pleased to know that with no official notice from Acer, the Intel-Atom-powered system has been spotted for sale at a handful of U.S. retailers, including CDW.

We've seen two models offered online. Both have the 1.6GHz Intel Atom N270 Processor and 1,024x600-pixel resolution 8.9-inch displays. The $399 version (model number A110-1295) has 512MB of RAM, Linux, and an 8GB solid-state hard drive, while another version (A150-1006), for $422 (from CDW, at least), has 1GB of RAM, a 120GB hard drive, and Windows XP. Both are cheaper than the 9-inch Eee PCs from Asus, which run $550-$599. Of course, being able to place an order for something online and actually receiving it are two different things, and we haven't heard of anyone getting their hands on one of these yet.

Besides the Atom-powered version of the popular Asus Eee PC, there's even more competition on the horizon, from MSI's long-delayed Wind, which is just hitting store shelves, and Dell's upcoming E series.

I ordered mine from eWiz and it's shipping from California and should arrive around the 17th. I'm so pumped.
